The framing story here is Ritwik's and the story-in-the-story is that of Miss Gilby's; Miss Gilby herself is a minor character from A Life Apart 'Ghare Baire' and Neel tells us her story, a new story because it's her version of things, including events from the original hundred year old novel in the old setting. It won some minor literary prizes here and there but did not manage to catapult him into the kind of fame that he deserved and garnered later post his Booker nomination for The Lives of Others. I do wish the ending A Life Apart have been more like an ending instead of leaving it to my imagination.
