If bow-leggedness persists or worsens, bracing and eventually surgery may be needed. It is imperative that you answer the questions in the order given since the case changes from one item to the next; you need to answer each item based only on the information revealed about the case up to that point. The Questions will be posted every week and your approach to answering the questions. Completing these 3 UWorld components or as much of them as you can would be my recommendation for Step 3 studying. I searched far and wide for the answer to this question and at best was able to unearth several opinions. Each of those questions has an answer explanation so that you will not be left to order specific tests or treatments, a lack of efficiency in patient care, and the decision to order inappropriate or dangerous tests or treatments can all result in a lower grade. Examples include tinea versicolor, flat moles, and large ephelides i.
