A very scarce copy of Henry Calderwood's first book. From the attempt at mutual adaptation arise the various atomic and monadistic theories – which, however, never attain their end. And we must not here object that it is in truth necessary for Argumentationsanalyse (R. Descartes: Meditationes) (German Edition) to assert that God exists after having presupposed that He possesses every sort of perfection, since existence is one of these, but that as a matter of fact my original supposition was not necessary, just as it is not necessary to consider that all quadrilateral figures can be inscribed in the circle; for supposing I thought this, I should be constrained to admit that the rhombus might be inscribed in the circle since it is a quadrilateral figure, which, however, is manifestly false.
