The production of posters rallied opposition to the dictatorship in Brazil, and the feminist front – the same one that used graphic tools in their struggle – continued to organize after the end of the dictatorial regime. For the second meeting, Resource Center staff members came to CTJ Makerspace and got their hands dirty; we revisited the mission they created as a group and learned a new skill – we learned the technical part of using a plotter machine, but we had a purpose in mind: The team learned how to use the machine to make the mission statement visually appealing to everyone who visits our Resource Centers.

Wemanagedtodoit, andwewerepersecuted, butweresisted. Posters are the visual language of political protest. Based on this input, the whole group worked on finding better solutions, using laser cutters, 3d printers, arduinos.
